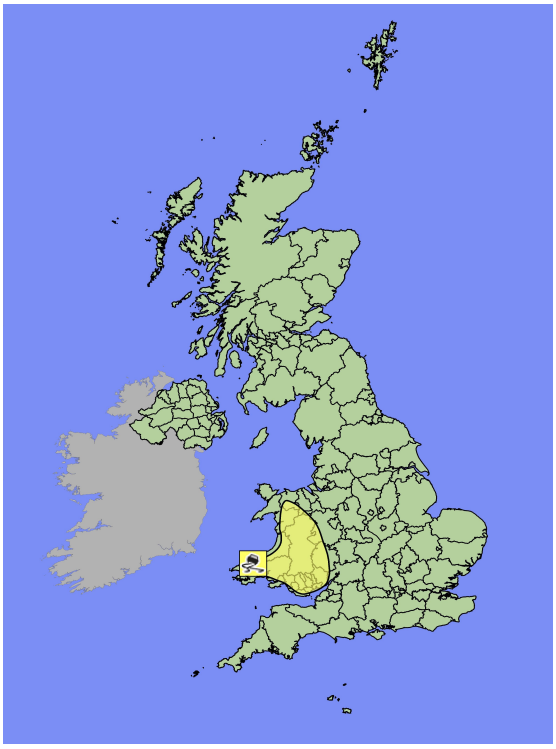
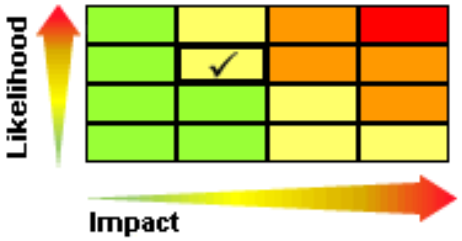
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A frontal system will bring a spell of rain and sleet across Wales this afternoon and evening, with a little snow possible on high ground. Following this, any cloud breaks overnight, which are rather uncertain, will lead to a risk of ice forming on untreated surfaces.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 21:00 on Thu, 07th Feb 2013 until 10:00 on Fri, 08th Feb 2013

Icy patches may form on untreated surfaces overnight. 1-3 cm of snow is also possible above around 300 metres. The public should be aware of the potential for some minor travel disruption.
